Delegates to the Montana Democratic Party platform convention went on record unanimously Saturday for repealing Montana's constitutional ban on gay marriages. Without any debate, they supported striking existing platform language advocating legal protection for same-sex civil unions and offering those couples the same legal benefits and responsibilities granted to other individuals "united by civil contracts under Montana laws."

The Montana governor joins New Jersey Senator Cory Booker as the second Democratic presidential candidate to express willingness to renegotiate the deal in the past day.

Steve Bullock vetoed House Bill 217, a bill that would have restored freedom of religion to Montana's churches that was stolen six years ago when the Montana Office of Political Practices tried to force a small congregation to be an "incidental political committee" for speaking out against an issue seen by it to be of vital religious significance. The church then sued to protect its right to religious freedom, the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals found in favor of the church, stating that the state of Montana had used petty political harassment to violate the Church's First Amendment rights. House Bill 217 was written to place religious <sup>27</sup> <https://lifeontheballot.com/montana/> Accessed 9-5-20 Steve Bullock's views on abortion are extreme. Most Montanans, whether pro-life or pro-choice, believe there should be reasonable restrictions on abortion to protect the health and safety of women and their unborn children, but Steve Bullock doesn't think there should be any limits at all. As Governor, Bullock has vetoed every piece of legislation passed by the legislature to protect women and unborn babies.

First and foremost, I expect him to take a very hum-drum, middle-of-the-road approach. As governor he cooperated with implementation of the Obama administration's Clean Power Plan, but you wouldn't find him cheering the plan in public. He also supported coal mining and oil drilling in principle, and as a member of the State Lands Board (an office he held automatically as governor and prior to that as attorney general) he seldom met a fossil fuel leasing proposal he wouldn't embrace.

This statement follows Daines' statement earlier today urging the Helena City Commission to vote against cutting funding to the Helena Police Department. "I'm glad the Helena City Commission decided to stand by our law enforcement today and ensure they have the resources needed to keep our communities and schools safe," Daines said.

Montana Department of Revenue at the Supreme Court tomorrow morning. This is one of the most important equal protection and religious freedom cases in recent history. This is about whether discrimination should stand. Today, the MT constitution discriminates against parents and their children based simply on the school they choose. This case could change that for future generations.

nuclear weapon. This agreement paves the way for Iran to further direct its resources in leading the way as the world's greatest state-sponsor of terrorism." Last night, Daines took to the Senate floor to outline parameters of what a final deal with Iran must include. The Iran Nuclear Agreement Review Act (Public Law 114-17) prevents the president from waiving or suspending congressional sanctions before Congress has the chance to vote on an agreement, if one is reached. Under this law, Congress has 60 days to review the proposed agreement once all pertinent documents are submitted.
